Read more: Support the Channel: With the new release coming out soon, in this episode I have a short, quick, and super, super long review! I'll go into details on the new features and improvements in this new release. This might not be the last review of this product, so for now, enjoy! Available for both PC and Mac, the new features and improvements include: New world create component lets you create a virtual world from scratch. Simple drag and drop components and components that are time-based are the only components available for world create. A very powerful new world-tracing system that uses all of the new features, works with the new world create and has its own unique features. Tutorials for the new components include learning how to be a private citizen, being a fisher, and a ranger. New components available in this version that are tutorial focused including a basic fisherman, a private citizen, a fisher, and a ranger. Added new event components that are tutorial focused. Added support for dragging and dropping packages and relays in the new world component. Changed how the world component is referenced and saved. Now the world component is saved with every update that the component is used. This way we can simply rebuild the component using the saved world, so we don't have to recreate the world every time we update the component. The base time setting has been made a bit more granular. A detailed and awesome revision history of the world component. A detailed revision history of the base time component. A detailed revision history of the world component. Added the ability to hide and show the world time component directly from the viewport tool shelf. Fixed the world time component so that it no longer acts like a camera control. Added a new set of categories to the world component: industrial, residential, and trailer. Added the ability to show/hide categories to the world component. Added tag-able fields to the world component. Added the ability to remove the grayed out fields from the world component. Added the ability to cancel out of prompts in the world
